

EDITORIAL

It is a section in newspaper or magazines in which the writers or editors share their opinion on ongoing topics. It is believed to be a brief essay on current issues; the writers share their opinion in regards to the publishing house which is seen as the opinion of the entire publishing house. If an article is written by someone else who belongs to the outsiders, then the disclaimer is shared.

Editorials are believed to be the heart and soul of the newspapers. Each and every newspaper is incomplete without the editorial section. Here the editor not only shares his or her view but also criticize and appreciate the ongoing topics. Editorial is light in nature they should be interesting, full of thought evoking and debatable at the same time. It is said to be the window or reflection of newspapers news policies meaning if an editor is writing an article it is generally assumed that it is the view of the news publishing house.

Steps for Writing an Editorial

There are several different steps you need to follow in order to be successful when writing in an editorial format:

Choose a Topic

The topic you choose is the most important part of writing a newspaper editorial. The best topics are those that are current issues in our society. If the topic is a current issue that everyone is already interested in then your editorial piece will engage the reader's attention.

If the topic you choose is an ongoing issue in society, make sure to use the most recent information. However, you can use older information as sources to help prove your case. Do not make your editorial a controversial topic, unless that is your whole reason for writing it in the first place.

Choose Your Opinion

You need to ask yourself if are you for or against the issue you have chosen as your topic for your newspaper editorial piece. You cannot be on both sides of the fence when writing an editorial piece. The purpose of the editorial is to give your opinion, the writer's opinion. With this in mind, you must give a strong, persuasive opinion. If not, readers will not be as inclined to see your point of view.

Outline Your Editorial

Oh, the dreaded outline. With any type of research paper you have to write an outline. This is one of the biggest tips on writing a newspaper editorial that you should always follow. With an outline you know where you stand on the issue. The outline helps you, the writer, get your thoughts and opinions in order. The outline also helps you discover any swaying of opinions you may have missed by just diving headfirst into writing.

Write Your Article

The first step to writing your newspaper editorial is to pick a hook that grabs readers' attention. If you grab their attention from the very beginning they are more inclined to keep reading. Your opinion on the topic should be addressed in the introduction to your new editorial.

Newspaper editorials should have at least three arguments. These arguments, of course, should be backed up with facts and evidence from your research on the topic:

Use statistics to help prove your argument.

Make sure your strongest argument is left for last.

Do not be passive in the arguments that come before the strongest. If this happens you likely will not have readers reading your entire newspaper editorial.

In a newspaper editorial, and with most anything else you write, your conclusion should sum up all the information you wrote about. The conclusion should tie your argument together and give readers a recap of all the facts that you presented in your editorial.

Your conclusion should also have a few solutions you think would help with the issue at hand. You are getting the reader to engage by asking him or herself questions on how they stand on a particular issue in our society.
